Instructional coaches are unique stakeholders in today's schools. They don't abandon their role of teacher. On the contrary, they celebrate teachers by embracing all the elements of the profession and sharing their learning with others.

~Heather Wolpert-Gawron

4 Recognize your leadership strengths – leaders have changed our world led without formal authority!

5 Write down how you will build in time to reflect on student function/outcomes during remote learning

6 Start gathering a picture of where each grade will be in the learning standards when school resumes in the Fall

7 Coordinate goals with grade-level teams to build your Fall term kick-off

1 Reach out to say, Thank You, to everyone you support and share a strength you admire in them

8 Start an email or text strand of, one thing remote learning taught me and connect it to your school's culture

11 Start a hashtag for summer connections, for example, #SummerConnect, #Summer Learning

12 Focus on your own area of responsibility and develop an action plan to make it great

13 Refine resource allocation processes based on remote learning strategies that improved student outcomes

14 Reflect and refine remote learning professional practices that will be carried into the next year

15 What are the data saying? How do you know?

18 Make a plan for differentiating the summer's professional learning opportunities

19 Smiles are contagious and cost nothing but offer so much to gain

20 How will you get behind your people and help them move ahead? [servant leadership]

21 Assess current data tools to transfer functionality, efficiency, and usefulness moving forward

22 What are common student needs linked to remote learning and how can we learn from them?

25 Celebrate even the small wins of reducing/removing barriers to remote learning

26 How and with whom will you share your remote summer coaching support schedule?

27 Host a virtual End of Year bash offering opportunity to celebrate your remote learning successes

28 Recognize others who have stepped up and lead during the pandemic

29 Analyze student data to inform overarching instruction/intervention planning
